ABOUT BENJAMIN ROSE INSTITUTE ON AGING
The Benjamin Rose Institute on Aging is a national leader pursuing innovation in practice and policy to address the important issues of aging. As a champion for older adults, BRIA works to advance their health, independence and dignity. The organization has established itself as a trusted resource for people who counsel, care for and advocate on behalf of older adults.

In Spring, 2013, the Institute opened a state-of-the-art education and training center to prepare executives, managers and practitioners to provide care and support that is responsive to the evolving demands of an aging population.

Individual and foundation contributions, earned income, government reimbursements and endowment earnings combine to form a stable and sustainable operating model that ensures the organization’s second century.

Friday, June 7

OUR SPEAKERS

John McCarthy oversees the Office of Medical Assistance (OMA) as Medicaid Director for the State of Ohio. An office within the Ohio Department of Job and Family Services, OMA is currently in the process of becoming our state’s first cabinet-level Medicaid agency – a move aimed at bringing comprehensive reform and quality improvement to Ohio’s health care landscape.

John Begala serves as the Executive Director of the Center for Community Solutions. He is a leader in public policy, executive of health and social service organizations, and educator.

Richard Browdie leads the Benjamin Rose Institute on Aging, a nationally recognized leader in service, research and advocacy addressing issues of aging, as its President and CEO.

Bonnie Kantor-Burman is the director of the Ohio Department of Aging. She was appointed to that cabinet-level position in January 2011 by Ohio Governor John Kasich.

Tracy Plouck directs the Department of Mental Health working with the Office of Health Transformation to modernize the state’s Medicaid system and integrate public health efforts that support people with physical and behavioral health needs.
